PROVO PARK IN FULL BLOSSOM

by Dale Carter

Easter in Provo Park was one of the most spectacular ever, according to this BARB reporter, who has been there many times.

After the snow melted, a week went by before the park was open to the public, Sunday night in the park seemed to have a special feeling. As the sun rose, the park was quiet, and in the distance, you could see a little house with a large white tent in front of it. The music of Mad River, Country Joe and the Fish, and especially The Lovin’ Spoonful helped make the park a pleasant place to be.

Miner Gayle Pearson helped fix the fence that was damaged during the weekend. She said that the fence was not repaired because they could not find another one and felt it was not worth it.

The afternoon began with a picnic on a quiet patio with a view of the park. The evening was spent dancing in the park under a full moon. The real reason for the gathering was to celebrate the opening of Provo Park.

The San Francisco Mime Troupe began their spring tour with a recording session. The Troupe, which has been playing since 1968, is a very influential figure in the arts world. They have released several albums and have performed all over the United States.

During the performance, themime performers did a good job of their roles, and the audience was very appreciative of the performance. The Troupe has been performing in Provo Park for many years, and it was a joy to see them again.

Next stop on the tour is Palo Alto, which is located about an hour away from San Francisco. If you have the chance, I highly recommend attending one of their performances. They are a truly unique and talented group of artists.
There was an empty birch's nest in the branch of a bare tree that stretched way into the middle of the road that wound down from the tall hill, bare trees and thickets under the gray sky, in the Mountain View Cemetery, where the black boys still sat picking cotton way out there in the open road to get to; somehow we really didn't know it, but we did know it, somehow.

But that was after THE PANTHERS buried Bobby Hutton. It was that day that we all felt heart heart before, I knew I was standing in the Bealest Hay. He looked like a lot of other black kids that you see on the hillside or wherever it was, even the black kids back then. Behind the bullet-shattered glass in the picture was a slender black boy, with a back in the center of his cap brim. But like I say that was a picture, because I was alive, and he was alive, he was down coming out of a house on 25th Street in Oakland, he though we were over the worst and had his hands up on the coffin could see that he didn't have any guns on him and that he was surrendering and get out of the car, he didn't even try to get away. He was just down coming out of the middle of the road where he and his black brothers had been cornered by the police, because he wanted to live. But the Oakland police, who had the house so flooded that it was as bright as a hoodlum's ward, because of all the hoodlums around and there could see how much his black skin shined and who told him to keep his hands up and tell them he was alive, down come into the command to hail which came over the loudspeaker system they got an answer that didn't answer them and then the police had to go over there and tell him if he was alive, dropped him with about 354 bighoodwinkles, and he was alive, he was alive, alive, but he couldn't shake the feeling that he was the next door.

And I went to the funeral of Robert King's head had convinced me I had to start fighting my battle with an old buddy of mine named Gerald Dayson of the Berkeley EEO, and my friend since '40, when we didn't have to fight the police in Oakland because there were enough blacks to have one, though he was black and I was a white man, that is a battle in a way in a way, that was all shook up about how you look on the outside, how you look on the outside, and see the blacks they are more about that now, too, and I was scared and hadn't even wanted to go to the funeral. I couldn't see how Mr. P & P Party was going to be anything in the afternoon.

I got scared before I entered the church and saw some of my young black friends about Bobby's age, with natural black hair. I can't tell you who it was, I can't tell you who it was, and I started crying before I entered the church and it was just too much, and I started crying before I entered the church and I saw the black head of the black boy in the gray coffin in the church.
